

The FCC worries about content of the Howard Stern Show, even though a person has the option to tune in to listen or not.

But it does not allow a person the option to not receive phone solicitations from radio and tv stations. These are most definately telemarketing calls, which I do not want to receive.

How would you like it if I were to call you anytime of the day or night asking you to turn on the tv or radio and watch or listen to specific shows?

Common sense, and I truly mean common sense, should be the norm on this issue.

Radio and tv stations should be put on the " Do not call " list at once. No exceptions. These are telemarketing calls.
